

THE HOUSTON FAMILY POST-DOC FELLOW LECTURE SERIES:

FEDERALISM AND HEALTHCARE: LESSONS FROM BRAZIL

Featuring:
Catarina Segatto, Houston
Family Post-Doc, Johnson
Shoyama Graduate School of Public Policy

The decentralization of Brazil's healthcare system has affected policy-making at its national and subnational levels of government. The physicians who occupied important roles within bureaucracies at both national and subnational levels were a significant catalyst for change. These physicians were able to convince and mobilize other political actors to promote decentralization, and encouraged the implementation of universal healthcare coverage in Brazil. Are there lessons that Canada can draw from the Brazilian case?
