Fixing the climate, economic and energy afflictions arising from current transport policy will involve a policy paradigm shift. This lecture explores policy tools available to implement such change, focusing on Canada's most important 20th century manufacturing output, automotive production as well as its most economically successful transport activity during the 19th and 21st centuries, the railway sector.

Anthony Perl is Director of the Urban Studies Program at Simon Fraser University, where he is also cross appointed as Professor of Political Science. He previously worked at the City University of New York, the University of Calgary and Universite Lumiere in Lyon, France. He holds a bachelor's degree in Government from Harvard University, and MA and Ph.D. in Political Science from the University of Toronto.
