JOHNSON SHOYAMA GRADUATE SCHOOL OF PUBLIC POLICY (JSGS)

Established in 2007, as a collaboration between the University of Regina and the University of Saskatchewan, the JSGS is recognized nationally for offering innovative educational programming for graduate students and public servants interested in improving public management and creating public value.

JSGS offers four professional graduate programs, two research-based programs—Master's and PhD in Public Policy—and a number of graduate certificates and executive education options. Both our Master of Public Administration and Master of Public Policy are nationally accredited by the Canadian Association of Programs in Public Administration.

Our faculty members are highly engaged in teaching, research, and writing that have an impact on issues affecting Canadians and the global community. Working with colleagues in the public service and industry, they enrich the evidence base on which policymakers can draw in order to develop policies and programs that positively impact the needs of citizens. Recent examples of some of their research include:

- Saskatchewan and Climate Change: The Challenges, Policy Options and Implications,
- Legalizing and Regulating Cannabis in Saskatchewan, and
- Provincial spending on public education across Canada.

In addition to individual faculty research, the school is also home to three research centres: Centre for the Study of Science and Innovation Policy, Centre for the Study of Co-operatives and the Indigenous Peoples' Health Research Centre.

At the JSGS, there are endless opportunities to engage with faculty, executives-in-residence, students and staff across campuses and with our alumni and supporters in the provincial and national policy community.
